PREFACE

'Smart English' a new series of English text books comprising of eight books from I to VIII following the pattern of NEP 2020. The series has been designed keeping in view the modern teaching, innovative and need-based learning of English at the primary and junior level. The main aim of the series is to guide the beginners in the proper way of understanding by giving them the knowledge of the basic and elementary concepts of English language.

The approach of these books is child oriented and activity based. These are designed to promote language development through various skills like comprehension, word building, written work, communication and discussion.

The texts included in the series have been carefully selected and graded. These are value-based and offer topics to suit every taste and interest. Special emphasis has been laid on the preservation of our rich heritage and the protection of the environment.

Exercises set at the end of each lesson will engage the students individually or in pairs or groups. It will instil in them the habit of independent thinking and also give them an equal opportunity to express their views, ideas and opinions. New words have been introduced in each lesson and their use explained with a view to enhance the vocabulary power of the students. It will encourage the students to use dictionary for learning new words and will also familiarise them with minute grammatical aspects of the language.

We sincerely believe that our efforts will be appreciated both by the teachers as well as the learners. Suggestions, if any, for improvement of the series will be thankfully acknowledged and incorporated in subsequent editions.

The Song of Freedom

This is the hour
Of song and dance,
For blissful freedom
Is ours at last.

Gone are those days of caste-born pride,
Gone is the foreigner's might:
Gone is passive subservience
Gone is the trickster's sway.

Freedom is our universal speech,
Equality the experienced grace;
We'll blow the conch of victory
And publish the truth to all.

We see that all are equal born;
Now lie and deceit are dead;
Only the good men are great—
Ruin has seized the wicked.

Honour to the ploughman and the worker!
Shame to the glutton and the rake!
We'll not water the wastelands,
Nor sweat for the idler's weal!

We've learnt that this is our own land,
It will be forever ours;
No nation shall enslave us again;
We'll prosper serving God, our sole Lord.

—Subramania Bharati

(Translated by Prema Nandakumar)

Adventures in Antarctica

SECTION-I

Christmas Day! It was hot and sunny in Santiago, the capital of Chile in South America. It was a most unusual December for us, used as we were to cold Decembers in the northern hemisphere. We bounced out of our beds quickly, wished each other Merry Christmas and skipped down the stairs into the living room. There stood our tree, decorated with bright buntings, shiny-coloured balls and twinkling lights, but something was missing. There were no gifts from our parents under the tree, or from Santa, for that matter! Mystified, we approached the tree slowly, but under the tree we saw two small white envelopes with our names on them. We got down on our hands and knees, and crawled around the tree, hoping to find a hidden gift we had missed. Nothing! Only the white envelopes. Disappointed, we peeled open the envelopes. To our surprise, each envelope held a small computer-printed invitation. It said :

This invitation entitles you to travel to Antarctica.

From : 17-28 February, 2005

Flight : Santiago to Punta Arenas, Chile

Ship : Punta Arenas to Antarctica

‘Are we hallucinating?’ we thought. ‘Antarctica? Are they kidding us?’

Our parents were now grinning widely at us. They assured us this was no trick. They and we had been invited to go to Antarctica as part of an expedition led by the Chilean Navy. The purpose of the expedition was to set up the first mobile phone base on the Antarctica mainland.

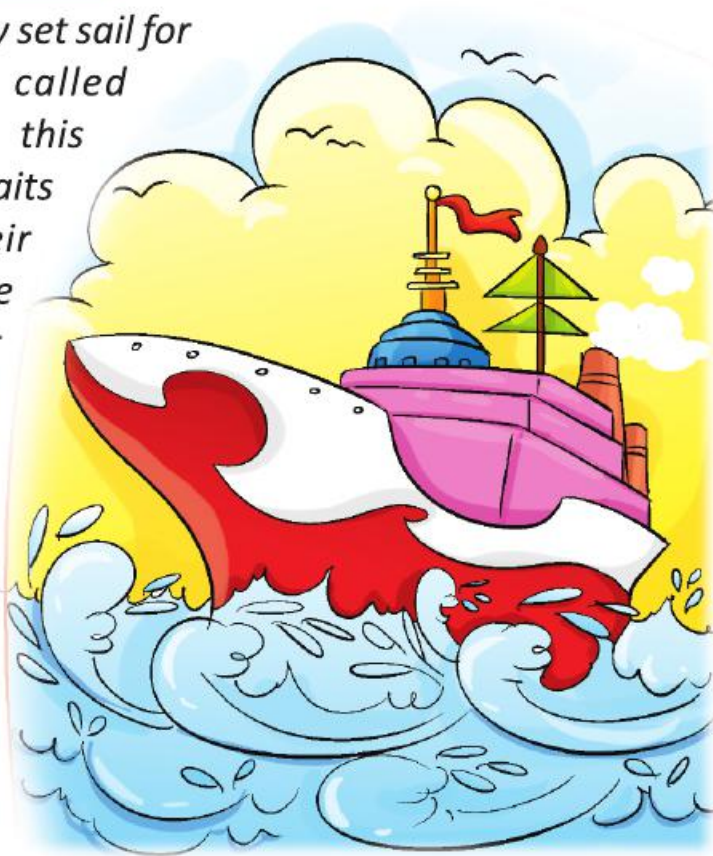

So far we had only read a little about Antarctica in geography textbooks. It was listed as the seventh continent of the world, largely unexplored, covered by ice and snow all year round. It released gigantic icebergs, had cocky little penguins that looked like cute butlers in their black-and-white plumage. Its ancient name was Terra Incognita, the Unknown Land. Now, we were actually going into this unknown, frozen and faraway place! Our chests puffed up, and we began to think of ourselves as great explorers, ready to conquer stormy seas and discover the untold secrets of our planet.

We couldn’t wait to surf the Web for more information. We found that we would traverse the world’s most violent seas and skim past yet unnamed islands to reach the mysterious continent of Antarctica. Our sailing route would take us from the city of Punta Arenas in Chile, through the Strait of Magellan, down the Beagle Channel, past Wollaston Island and Cape Horn, then across the Drake Passage and on to Antarctica.

SECTION-II

Having taken a flight to Punta Arenas, they set sail for their destination in an icebreaker called Romphehielo Almirante Viel Toro. In this excerpt, they have already crossed the Straits of Magellan and are describing their adventures in crossing the fearsome Drake Passage, which had earned a reputation for being the most turbulent sea on the planet.

We could feel the tension on the ship. Everyone looked serious, their faces taut with anxiety. It was our third night on board, and it was time to enter the Drake Passage. This passage is the principal reason why the continent of Antarctica was not discovered for a long time. Seafaring explorers and courageous captains just could not get across it, nor pierce its mantle of ice and snow and shrouds of mist. Occasionally, one can encounter the 'Drake Lake', with low winds and calm waters, but one was more likely to get the fearsome 'Drake Shake,' unleashing all the fury of the elements. You have waters so savage and treacherous that even the most experienced sailors fear to cross. Even with modern technological advances in seafaring, merciless storms in the Drake can leave ships stranded. It seemed that we were heading for some awesome conditions.

Now we were moving towards the Antarctic Convergence. The waters of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans churn around Antarctica in a windy fury. The beginning of the Drake Passage itself gave us a preview of how terribly fierce the seas would be all along. By bedtime the weather had deteriorated sharply. The ship was lurching alarmingly. Waves 32 to 50 feet high were breaking over its bow and stern! The Drake Passage was rocking and rolling—and how! Our ship bobbed up and down like a cork in the heaving, raging waters.

Our previous brief encounter with the Drake had not prepared us for the shaky-shaky-shakes. We had imagined, at worst, an experience close to the most hair-raising rides in Disneyland. Not one of us had expected the full wind of 90 knots that hit us around two o'clock in the morning. With 30-metre-high waves crashing into it, the ship rocked so wildly that no one of us felt inclined to make it for breakfast later that morning. We stayed in our cabins and clung to our berths. The vicious seas and the screaming winds all converged to put us through the 'Drake Shake'.

We were afraid to let go of the side rails for fear of being pitched out onto the floor. We had taken seasickness pills, but there was no time to even think of seasickness. At some point we gave up trying to sleep and just concentrated on keeping ourselves on the berth. By the time we had crossed the Drake, over the next two days, we ended up with skin burns and strained muscles from sliding from one end of the berth to the other. We would have loved to take dramatic pictures of the ship's bow crashing through mountain waves, but after the first few, this was out of the question. Just getting from our bunks to the bathroom was risky business! Dad was thrown clear across the cabin once and lucky not to have cracked open his head! Luckily, we were by ourselves in the cabin at that time, so no one saw us crawling like insects to the toilet.

The crossing of the Drake was a nail-biting, hair-raising experience: howling winds, zero visibility mist and fog, no sun and enormous waves tossing and spinning the ship around like clothes in a washing machine. It had taken us two full days and two full nights to get across the Drake. During our fifth night on board, we felt the tossing of the ship subside and sank thankfully into a long-awaited sleep of exhaustion.

We woke up in the morning of the next day to find that we had crossed the Drake and were officially in Antarctica. Small icebergs floated all around the ship like a silent, curious welcome party, while one large tabular berg lay lazily to the right side. We dug into a hearty breakfast, grateful to be alive, to be able to stand straight without being knocked down. Enduring such a stormy crossing was an experience to remember. The weather had eased, and the rolling of the ship was now almost pleasant, like a comfortable rocking chair.

Our first sighting of land was Smith Island but we did not stop there. We crossed the Gerlache Strait—a picture-postcard waterway—heading for Paradise Bay on the Antarctic Peninsula, the northward finger of the polar continent.

The morning sun was still circled in pale mists. It was perceptibly colder both above and below deck. A lone albatross, who had taken a shine to us and led us on through the worst of the Drake Passage, now welcomed us to the Antarctic. We dug our hands into the kangaroo pouch of our windcheaters and sighed. We wished time would run faster. With excitement goosebumping our skin, we waited for our first landfall on the fabled continent of Antarctica.

A Conversation with Sania

Sania Mirza and Alisa Kleybanova of Russia won 2-6, 6-3 and 6-2 against Katerina Bohmova of the Greek Republic and Michaela Krajicek of the Netherlands. The last time we saw an Indian girl in the final of a Grand Slam was when Rita Dabur finished as runner-up in the singles in 1952.

Fan 1 : Hi Sania! We are proud of you. How does it feel to be a Grand Slammar?

Sania : It feels great! And if it is your Grand Slam, it's a really great feeling.

Fan 1 : How important do you think education is for a sportsperson?

Sania : For me, it's very important. I would definitely like to complete my graduation. When you are twenty five and done with tennis, you will want to do something else. So education is extremely important.

Fan 2 : You have strong legs insisted that Indians are very good with their hands. You mentioned Leander Paes as an example.

How can you translate this into your winning formula?

Sania : I think I need to work hard on my feet, fitness and endurance.

My hands are pretty strong. Most Indians have good hands. We have to work much harder on our fitness as compared to, say the Europeans and the Russians.

Fan 3 : Do you think that sportspersons are ambassadors of their countries?

Sania : Definitely, sportspersons play for their country and carry the hopes of the people of their country with them.

Fan 4 : If you had not become a sportsperson what would you have been?

Sania : I have never thought about it, but I am interested in Interior Design.

Now, at twenty years of age, Sania has made it to the top-30 in the world ranking. After Ramesh Krishnan was ranked 23 in June 1987, no Indian player, man or woman has made it to the top-30 so far.

Fruits of Labour

This story took place long, long ago. Out in the country lived a man with his two sons. His wife had been dead for many years and he had brought up his children himself. But he was not satisfied with the upbringing of his sons. Since the boys were motherless, he had been very lenient with them and spoiled them to some extent.

His sons were lazy, good-for-nothing. They enjoyed wearing fine clothes, eating rich food and spending their time lounging around doing nothing.

As the man grew older, he started worrying about his sons. He owned the best orchard for miles around. The oranges, apples, peaches, plums and cherries from his orchard were best that money could buy. They were famed far and wide for their sweetness and juiciness. Day in and day out, the old man tended his orchard. He got no help from his lazy sons. Lovingly he dug, raked, hoed and watered the trees.

One cold and frosty winter day the old man was nearing his death, still a very worried man. He called for his two sons. When they entered his room, they found their father gazing dreamily out of the window. Following their father's gaze, both the sons saw was the bare orchard. Most of the trees had shed their leaves. They looked like scarecrows without clothes. The earth was parched and hard. Altogether, the orchard was a dreary sight.

‘Do you see my orchard?’ the old man asked his sons in a quavering voice.

‘Yes, father,’ said one.

‘It looks so barren and forlorn,’ said the other.

‘My sons, it is wonderful orchard,’ whispered the old man . ‘It has given us the best of fruits year after year. The golden peaches and oranges, and the ruby-red apples and cherries have been my pride over these long years.’

‘Yes, the orchard is very fruitful,’ said his sons.

The old man looked at his sons. They wore beautiful, spotlessly clean clothes. Their hands were soft and pale. These hands had seen neither the warmth of the sun, nor the harshness of the soil.

The dying man murmured, ‘My sons, there is a great treasure hidden in my orchard. If you want to find this treasure, you will have to give up your lazy ways.’

‘Yes, father. We will do anything to discover this hidden treasure.’

‘Then listen well,’ said the old man. ‘You will have to dig deep. Very, very, deep. The treasure is scattered amongst the fruit trees. Every little bit of earth in the orchard will have to be turned over. However, do not dig too close to the tree trunks. Neither should you dig too far from them. Dig properly, my sons.’ So saying the old man breathed his last.

The old man's sons dug a grave for their father's body and buried it. It was hard work. They were tired.

'We'll dig for the treasure another day,' they said.

They lazed and they lazed, always putting off digging for the treasure. But they soon found they had not enough money for the good life they were used to.

So, one fine day they rolled up their sleeves and started the hunt for their father's treasure. They dug and they dug. Not being used to manual labour, they found the work very tiring. Their backs hurt, their hands were rough and sore and their silken clothes were all ruined. But they continued to dig.

The season changed. Winter gave way to spring. The trees sprouted fresh green leaves. These in turn grew bigger and turned to a darker shade of green. The sons noticed nothing. They carried on their search for the treasure, but found only stones, which they threw out.

After a while, blossoms appeared on the fruit trees. By and by the trees were all ablaze with pink and white flowers. The apple blossom was snowy-white and the cherry blossoms a beautiful rose pink.

The two brothers saw none of this. They dug and they dug, searching for the promised treasure. The summer went by and autumn approached. Yet, no treasure did they find.

With the coming of autumn, delicate little fruits began appearing on the trees. Still the two boys searched. The fruits ripened. The orchard was heavily laden with red and golden fruit.

'There is no treasure here,' said one. 'We have dug up every inch of this orchard.'

‘We might as well give up,’ said the second son. ‘Let’s sell the fruit. We should be able to get a little money for it.’

The fruit merchant was called. ‘I have never seen such an excellent quality of fruit, he said in amazement.’ ‘I will give you much more gold than I promised you for this crop.’

The two sons couldn’t believe their ears! Handing over the sacks of gold coins to the brothers the merchant said, ‘You must have looked after this orchard very lovingly. This fruit shows that you have dug deep turned the soil over well. You must have removed every weed, every stone. Only then could you have got this wonderful treasure. If you produce fruit like this, I will buy your crop every year.’

The Song of Songs

Slowly, gently, the exhausted musician laid his tanpura on the carpet. The exquisite strains of raag darbari still vibrated within the hall. Emperor Akbar looked up his eyes hit with admiration. “Wonderful” he said, “Superb! I listen to you every day, but I cannot seem to have enough!”

Tansen loved in silent gratitude. “I think you have the most wonderful voice in the world!” said Akbar.

“But I do not, Shahenshah!” said Tansen with a smile. “There is someone else who sings for better than I do.”

“Really?” cried the disbelieving Akbar. “Then I must have him sing in my court can you arrange it?”

Tansen shook his head. I am afraid he will not come Sire.

“What! Not even if he hears that the emperor himself summoned him?” “No, not even them.”

This reply would have enraged any other emperor. But Akbar was different.

“Very well Ustadji,” said Akbar, smiling into Tansen’s half-scared eyes. “if he would not come, I shall go to him myself. Will you take me to him?”

“Yes, Sire, provided you do not come as the emperor of Hindustan.” I shall be as a humble lover of music. Sant Haridas was the man Tansen had spoken of. He had been Tansen’s music teacher, and he lived the austere life of a hermit. When Tansen and the emperor reached his hut, he was busy with his daily chores. When they asked him to sing, he smiled, but said firmly, ‘I am long past the age for singing’. Even his favourite pupil could not persuade him to change his mind.

But Tansen knew how to get around him. He offered to sing before his guru and he made a deliberate mistake as he sang. ‘That is not the right note, Tansen’ cried his teacher, amazed. “What has happened to you?”

Tansen pretended not to understand his teacher and he made the same mistake again. Exasperated, sant Haridas took the Tanpura from Tansen’s hand and sang the right note. Then he went on the next and the next.

The melody of his voice spread across the forests like the first glimmer of dawn or the fragrance of jasmine. Both Akbar and Tansen listened to him as if they were hypnotized and the emperor realized that Tansen had spoken the truth he had not known that music could be like this! He had certainly never heard anything like it before.

As they walked back, the emperor suddenly broke the silence to ask Tansen, “Why cannot you sing like him, Ustadji?”

Tansen smiled, “Shahenshah, I sing at your command-the command of the emperor of Hindustan. But Guruji sings for one who is king of kings! His music springs from the depths of his soul, free and unasked. How can my music hope to reach those heights?”

Swimmer

In 1966, Mihir Sen did something that no other swimmer had done before. He swam across the seven seas of the five continents in one calendar year! Mihir sen did not always know how to swim. Till he was 22, he only dog paddled. He was not coached in the art of swimming. It was the urge to do something great which made him go to England. In London, he spent a lot of time on railway platforms as a porter, till he got a clerical job in the office of the Indian high commission.

In spite of full time job and studies, he spent every free minute in a swimming pool. For three years, Mihir went through gruelling training, till on 27th September 1958, he swam across the English Channel from Dover in England to Calais in France in 14 hours and 45 minutes, thus setting a record as the first Asian to have done so. He was awarded the Padma Shri in 1959 for his conquest of the 26 mile English Channel.

1966 was a year of great achievements for Mihir Sen. In April, he set a world record by swimming across the Palk Strait, the sea between India and Sri Lanka. It was a brave feat, to dare the dangerous waves and the shark-infested waters. In August, Mihir swam across another dangerous stretch of water, the shark filled strait of Gibraltar between Europe and Africa. In September, he became the world's first man to swim the extremely dangerous strait of Dardanelles. In recognition of all these achievements he was awarded the Padma Bhushan in 1967. His achievements forested the spirit of adventure in many young Indians.

In 1974, Avinash Sarang, a former water polo player from India, crossed the English Channel despite very bad weather. Sarang's success revived interest in the channel, and between 1983 and 1989, 14 Indians made the crossing among them were children like Arthi Pradhan, who in 1987, at the age of 14, became the youngest Asian to swim the channel and V. Kutraleshwaran from Tamil Nadu, who crossed the channel in 1994 at the age of 12! That year Kutraleshwaran completed five other ocean swims and entered the Guinness Book of world records.

Among Indians channel conquerors, Taranath Shenoy's 1983 feat is specially remarkable. Despite being deaf, mute and partially blind, Shenoy made to crossing in just 10 hours and 54 minutes. The following year he attempted to swim non-stop from England to France and back, but was unable to complete the return leg.

Of the 22 Indians who have crossed the channel, six have been women. The most impressive has been the former national swimmer champion, Anita Sood, who in 1987 crossed the channel in eight hours and 15 minutes the fastest ever by an Indian. It was in the same year that another woman, C.N. Janaki (who was struck by polio when she was two years old) became the first physically disabled woman to be part of a successful team-crossing of the channel. These swimmers could accomplish all this because of their love of adventures.

Cherry Tree

One day, when Rakesh was twelve, he walked home from the Mussoorie Bazaar, eating cherries. They were little sweet, little sour, small bright red cherries, which had come all the way from the Kashmir Valley.

Rakesh lived with his grandfather on the outskirts of Mussoorie, first where the forests began. His father and mother lived in a small village fifty miles away. There were no schools in the village and Rakesh's parents were keen that he should go to school. As soon as he was of school-going age, they sent him to stay with his grandfather in Mussoorie. Rakesh was on his way home from school when he bought the cherries it took him about half an hour to walk home and by the time he reached the cottage, there were only three cherries left.

“Have a cherry, Grandfather,” he said as soon as he saw his grandfather in the garden.

Grandfather took one cherry and Rakesh promptly ate the other two. He kept the last seed in his mouth for some time, rolling it round and round on his tongue. Then he placed the seed in the palm of his hand and studied it.

“Are cherry seeds lucky?” asked Rakesh.

“Of course.”

“Then I will keep it.”

Nothing is lucky if you put it away if you want luck you must put it to some use.

“What can do with a seed? Plant it”.

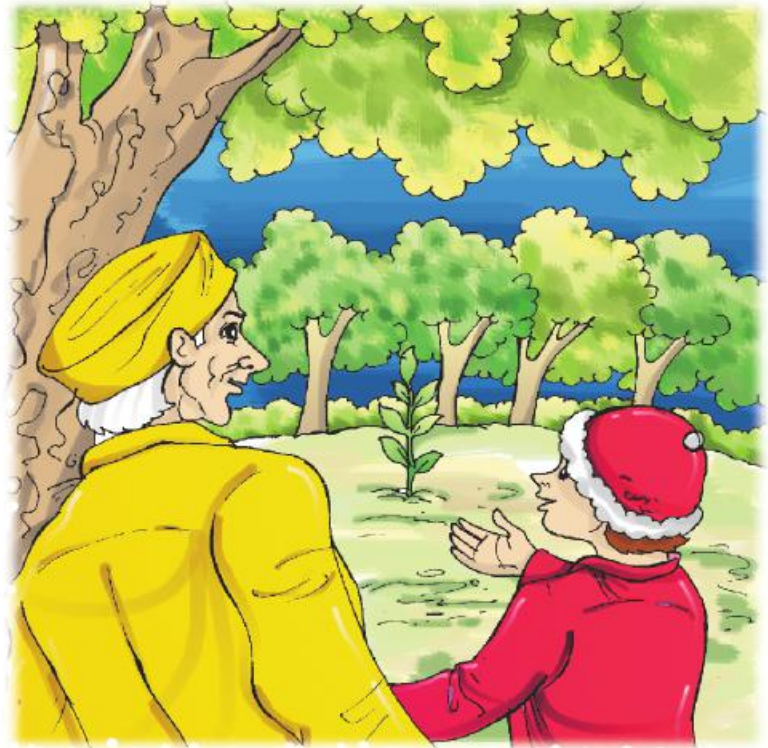

Rakesh went to the corner of the garden where the earth was soft and yielding. He did not hour to dig. He pressed the seed into the soil with his thumb and it went right in.

Then he had his lunch and ran off to play cricket with his friends and forgot all about the cherry seed.

One morning in the garden he bent to pick up what he thought was a small twig and found to his surprise that it was well rooted. He stared at it for a moment and ran to fetch his grandfather calling, 'Dada, come and look, the cherry tree has come up!'

"What cherry tree?" asked grandfather, "who had forgotten about it." 'The seed we planted last year-look, it's come up!'

Rakesh went down on his haunches, while grandfather bent almost double and peered down at the tiny tree. It was about four inches high.

"Yes, it's a cherry tree," said Grandfather, "You should water it now and then."

Malu Bhalu Family

High up in an icy lair
Lived a little polar bear
Snow white, snow bright was her mane,
Malu Bhalu was her name.

Very soon our Malu Bhalu
Learnt the things her parents knew.
Fish to catch, big and small...
Malu was a clever girl.

Malu said to her mother one day:
Ma, I'm going far out to play.
I want to see the things that lie

There beyond the big blue sky.
A little patience, child, said Mum,
In the summer when next it comes.
Summer?... Patience?... What a test!
Malu simply could not rest.

First things first! Malu's mum
Clasped Malu tight within her arms.
Then she said— her voice was firm
Now my dear you'll have to swim.

But Ma! said Malu, what do I know?
How will I? I've never swum before!
Don't worry dear, said Malu's mother,
Do as I do, that's all, she advised her.

She had no choice, no other way,
Malu had to swim that day.
Tight she gripped her mother's hand,
Into the water splash! to land.

Brave mother's brave young daughter!
Doubt and fear she left behind her.
Malu swam with all her might,
It didn't matter wrong or right.

But swimming came so naturally,
Her mother knew this and all could see.
Fearless was Malu, this she knew,
Not just brave, but special too.

Two Birds

There once lived a bird and her new born babies in a forest. They had a nest in a tall, shady tree and there the mother bird took care of her little ones day and night.

One day, there was big storm. There was thunder, lightning and rain and the wind blew down many trees. The tall tree in which the birds lived also came down. A big heavy branch hit the nest and killed the bird. Fortunately for the baby birds, the strong wind blew them away to the other side of the forest. One of them came down near a cave where a gang of robbers lived. The other landed outside a Rishi's Ashram a little distance away.

Days passed and the baby birds became big birds. One day, the king of the country came to the forest to hunt, he saw a deer and rode after it. It ran deep into the forest followed by the king. Soon the king lost his way and did not know where he was.

He rode on for a long time till he came to the other side of the forest. Very tired by now, he got off his horse and sat down under a tree that stood near a cave. Suddenly he heard a voice cry out, "Quick! Hurry up! There is some one under the tree. Come and take his jewels and his horse. Hurry or else he will slip away." The king was amazed. He looked up and saw a big, brown bird on the tree under which he was sitting. He also heard faint noises issuing from the cave. He quickly got on to his horse and rode away as fast as he could.

Soon, he came to a clearing which like an ashram. It was the rishi's ashram. The king tied his horse to a tree and sat down in its shade. Suddenly he heard a gentle voice, "Welcome to the ashram, sir please go inside and rest. The rishi will be back soon." There is some cold water in the pot. Please make yourself comfortable." The king looked up and saw a big brown bird in the tree. He was amazed. "This one looks like the other bird outside the cave," he said to himself aloud. "You are right sir," answered the bird. "he is my brother but he has made friends with robbers."

He now talks as they do. He does not talk to me any more." Just then the rishi entered the ashram.

"Welcome Sir," he said to the king, "Please come inside and make yourself at home. You look tired. Rest for while. Then you can share my food." The king told the rishi the story of the two birds and how each had behaved so differently though they looked so alike. "The forest is full of surprises," he said.

The holy man smiled and said, "After all one is known by the company one keeps." That bird has always heard the talk of robbers. He imitates them and talks about robbing people. This one has repeated what he was always heard. He welcomes people to the ashram. Now, come inside and rest. I will tell you more about this place and these birds."

My Bird Sings

Your pretty bird in gilded cage,
Flutters its sorrowful wings.
But there never a cage-bird yet could sing,
As my bird sings.

He's little and brown and wild and shy,
But free to build and thrive.
Your poor bit thing behind its bars
Is only half-alive!

My bird sings out with a true wood-note,
Yours pipes of sorrowful things,
And never, now, may he learn the song
That my bird sings.

Never, now, may he wheel and soar
With the sunshine on his wings.
O, a bird in a cage is a crippled thing
But my bird sings!

For mine is every bird that flies
On free, wild wings,
And there's never a cage-bird yet could
Sing as my bird sings.

The Man of the House

When I woke I heard my mother coughing in the kitchen. Her coughing sounded terrible. I dressed and went down stairs and in the clear morning light I saw her lying into a little armchair. She had tried to light the fire but could not able to. She looked so tired and helpless that my heart turned over with compassion. I ran to her.

‘Are you all right, Mum?’ I asked. ‘I will be all right in a second’, she replied trying to smile. The old sticks were wet and the smoke started me coughing. ‘Go back to bed and I will light the fire’, I said. ‘Ah, how can I child?’ she said. ‘I have to go to work.’

‘You could not work like that’, I said. ‘I will stop at home from school and look after you’.

I got more sticks out of the coal hole. My mother was so economical that she never used enough and that was why fire sometimes went against her. I made her hot buttered toast and tea using whole bundle of sticks. Then put the shawl around her.

I also had my breakfast, then I went out and stood by the front door to watch the kids on their way to school. They asked you are not going to school. I said, 'My mother is sick and I have to mind the house.'

Then I heated another kettle of water and cleared up breakfast things. I said to mother, 'Would you like me to get the doctor?' she replied "No." Then I went to chemist and asked him to give good, strong cough syrup.

When I reached home, I rushed upstairs and found Minnie Ryan, my mother's friend sitting with her.

"How are you Mom?" I asked, 'Great', said my mother with smile, "You cannot get up today," said Minnie Ryan. "I will make a cup of tea for you," I said. "I think I will do that," said Minnie. "Ah, do not worry, Miss Ryan," I said "I can manage it."

"He is very good," I heard her say in a low voice to my mother, "As good as gold," said mother.

Poor George

George hated school. It wasn't that his teachers were that bad. Actually, they tried their best with George. It was that he was uninterested in practically everything related to school.

"I had rather draw or play baseball anyways," he would mutter.

Last Open House, George waited up for his mom and dad to return home so he could hear the reports his teachers gave about him.

"George, all your teachers say the same thing," his father stated firmly. "You just don't put enough effort into your subjects. George, you could do a lot better if you tried harder!"

Poor George. He did try. Dad didn't know much he tried. School stuff just didn't come easy like it did for his older sister, Jill. That was another problem. Every teacher who discovered Jill was George's sister said the same thing.

"What a lovely girl and wonderful student George thought."

Well, it was during spring that things took a turn for better for poor George.

Every year, that seventh grade put on an Easter performance – singing, dancing and reciting poetry. A photographer usually appeared on the opening day and took pictures for the local newspaper. As usual George was doodling his little drawings while Mrs. Gema was choosing students for various activities in the show. "This is boring," thought George as he escaped into his world of cartoons. He was so deep in his daydreams that he didn't notice that Mrs Gema standing directly in front of him!

“Uh, Oh,” he whispered to himself. She took away his drawings and said firmly, “George, see me after class.”

As the bell rang for lunch, everyone flies out—everyone except poor George. He walked slowly up to his teacher’s desk wondering what, his punishment would be. Mrs Gema’s response was a surprise.

“George Ritman, do not doodle during class again. You know my feelings about that. I am surprised at you. Now, these drawings show me that you are quite an artist. We are going to use your talent in the Easter show. Would you like to be in-charge of all the secretary, artwork and staging, George?”

“Wow!” He could not believe it! Mrs. Gema wanted him to do all of that by himself? What fun? The ideas were already flooding his brain finally, George had the chance to really prove what he could do.

“Geoge, if you really don’t want to do it, I could pick another student.” “No, no! I do! I do, Mrs Gema. I’ll get right to work!”

As George rather clumsily left the classroom tripping over the waste basket first – Mrs Gema smiled broadly. She knew this would give her unmotivated student the confidence and recognition he desperately needed.

The next few weeks were hectic ones for George. He would finish his homework during lunch time and work on the stage during recess and after school. Only two other students were chosen to help but Mrs Gema stressed to George, he was in-charge.

Business sprang to life. Flowers popped through vibrant green grass. George felt a tremendous sense of excitement. His mom certainly did not need to ‘push’ her son to school these mornings!

“What colour should I paint the basket, George?” Amanda asked one afternoon.

“Light brown, but be careful not to get the colour on the eggs. Let me cover the eggs with newspaper so they won’t get in your way.”

Amanda waited brush in hand while the slight boy carefully covered the easter eggs with paper.

“Thanks George,” she said cheerfully and went back to work.

Well, finally it was done. Mrs Gema took a last look while the entire seventh grade watched her. George waited, holding his breath. May be she wouldn't like it May be. I should have painted the business yellow, May be.....

“George Ritman, you have done a remarkable job. I am so very proud of you. I have never seen a more beautiful and authentic stage!”

Then he heard clapping. They were clapping for George and it felt so wonderful. His parents would be here tonight. They would smile in the audience so they gazed at the scenery their son had created.

George felt a part of the class now. He was respected by his friends and admired for his talent. As he looked once again at the beautiful Easter scene on stage, he whispered softly, “I did a pretty good job after all.”

A Champion

A young boy walked home dragging his feet. His parents were waiting for him. One look at him and they knew what had happened.

"It does not matter Anand," said his father. "If two people play, one has to lose." You won last time and you would win again. Let's try and see why you lost this time.

The boy who had come home after losing a game of chess was Vishwanathan Anand or Vishy Anand as he is known to his fans.

Anand's mother Sushila Vishwanathan feels that day her son learnt two very important lessons. Losing is a part of winning and winning comes easier if you learn from your mistakes. Anand certainly learnt these lessons well. He learnt how to win and how to lose. He has always tried to learn from his mistakes. These lessons helped him win the world championship in 2000.

There was an old battered tricycle lying around the house when Anand was a toddler. It belonged to his elder brother. It tilted to one side and the handle and pedals were twisted. Anand's mother says he worked out a way of riding it he would happily ride it all over the house.

Anand's mother says that she loves chess. She enjoys the mental challenge of the game and would solve chess problems printed in the newspapers.

Apart from being interesting and fun, she feels chess is good for developing mental skills. So she used to play it with her elder son and daughter who were much older than Anand. Anand learnt to play by watching them. He showed a real interest in the game and from the age of six started playing it quite regularly with his mother.

When Anand was nine, his father was transferred to Manila. It was there that he became really good at chess.

There was a television programme on chess called 'Chess Today'. It was broadcast in the afternoon when Anand was at school. Anand's mother would make notes or record it for Anand.

At the end of every programme, there was a competition. You had to solve a chess puzzle and send it to the programme director. The winner got a prize for the correct solution, usually books on chess. Anand loved to participate in the competition. He won so after that he collected a lot of books.

Infact, after a while, the director of the programme told him, "Anand, do not enter this contest. You can come and choose whatever books you want from our collection!"

Anand read these books thoroughly. Infact, he read whatever books he could lay his hands on. Like many boys of his generation Anand loved reading Amar Chitrakatha comics and used to quiz the elders in the family on the stories.

Anand plays tennis or swims for exercise. As a world-class chess player he has to keep physically fit for peak performance. When he is relaxing with his family, Anand likes to play games like carom or cards.

A Serial Story

I reside right on the top of a hill and Rama's school is right at the bottom so I thought it would be a fantastic idea if I walked two miles to school with her every morning.

"Tell me a story she said the first time we sit together and so I told her a tale and the next day I told her another. Telling story on everyday basis become routine until I discovered that in this way my all creative ideas are being used by me and there are no ideas left for writing a story.'

So I decided it had to be a serial story and I found the best way to keep the story being going. He made a story of leopard who eats new man every day that is having different small victim everyday.

Every small girl loves this kind of stories so Rama also. Everyday in his story one of the townsfolk disappeared. I always start my story with town gossip.

I must tell here something that I was getting more pleasure out of the story than Rama was getting out of it.

“When is it leopard going to the shot?” asked Rama one morning, I said ‘not yet’.

But towards the end of the year I was beginning to have feeling of guilt. I started asking myself who am I, a mere mortal who will decide, about who should be eaten and who should survive?

Well things came to a head when a real leopard appeared on hillside. So I decided to end the story because my wild imagination brought into being an actual leopard and he thought it might soon start killing the townsfolk. So, I announced that leopard dead.

Rama asked how he died, I told her because of his eating too many people, he suffered from acute indigestion.

The Little Boy Hari

Once upon a time, not so very long ago, there was a small boy called Hari. Although he wasn't very big, but he was strong, and he loved to tease all the boys and girls who went to school with him. What he loved to do most was pinch. He could make a big bruise appear in half a second. Another trick he played was pricking people with a pin.

So you can guess how all the children hated him. They tried pricking him back, but that was no good because he could always pinch harder. They didn't like telling their teacher, because that was telling tales.

It so happened that the class went for a picnic to the seaside for a whole day. All the children were most excited.

On that day, the sun shone brightly, and all the children were wild with excitement. They crowded into the train and sat down—but nobody wanted to sit next to Hari because he always pinched.

When they arrived at the seaside out jumped all the children with a shout of joy. Down to the sands they raced, hand in hand but nobody took Hari's hand. Nobody went near him.

Hari was angry. He went to a sandy corner where a rocky pool and sat down by himself. He took out his lunch and looked at it. It was a good lunch. There were two hard-boiled eggs, six jam sandwiches, three pieces of bread and butter, a ginger cake, and a bar of chocolate. He would eat it all by himself. He wouldn't offer anything to anyone!

Just as he was beginning on the eggs, he heard a house voice near him, "Good morning! I am so pleased to meet a boy like you." Hari turned around and stared in fright. Whatever do you think he saw?

Hari saw a monster crab walking scale ways out of the pool. His eyes were on the ends of short stalks and he looked more queer. He held out his front claw to Hari. Hari put out his hand to shake the crab's claw, but to his surprise and anger the crab opened his pincers and nipped his hand so hard that the little boy yelled.

"Ah, here is my good cousin," said the crab pleasantly, and to Hari's horror, he saw a large sandy lobster crawling heavily out of the pool. Before the little boy could stop him the lobster took his hand in his great pincer-like claws and pinched it so hard that Hari yelled in pain.

Then he stared at the pool in surprise, for, out came sandy-coloured shrimps and prawns, more crabs and another large lobster and they pricked Hari till he was soon black and blue with their pinching.

"Don't you like it?" said all the creatures in surprise.

"Why, we were told you would love to see us because you were a champion pincher and pricker yourself come, come join in the fun!"

Hari leapt to his feet crying loudly. His lunch rolled into the pool, and when the crabs and lobsters saw it they ran to it, and began to feast eagerly. Hari saw that they had forgotten him for a time and he turned and ran for his life, tears streaming down his cheeks.

"They only did to me what I keep doing to the other children," he thought. "But how it hurt and how hated those crabs and lobster! I suppose the other children hate me too. Well, I jolly well shan't pence or prick anymore."

bruise : to injure by striking; guess : to estimate; pinched : to squeeze; beginning : an act; lobster : edible marine; pence : used in referring to a sum of money rather than to the coins.
